6 Practical Ways We Can Build Godly Character in our Children

Last week we talked about how families and staff can partner together to be the good examples for Godly character. The second practical way to build Godly character in our children is to give our children Godly role models. Many children like to put up posters of their favorite sports star or favorite musician or actor. Help them pick them carefully. There are some great Godly role models out there and some that are not. J.J. Watt comes to mind along with Case Keenan. You can also read some Christian biographies together or meet some missionaries and get to know them. Introduce them to Godly people in your church. In fact, the book, Sticky Faith, says that kids should have 5 Godly people that they could reach out to for advice or help. It is up to us as families and educators to help our children make good choices for role models.
